The Queen was received by Lord Pembroke, Lord Clarendon, and the Mayor of Westminster.

A surprise had been arranged for the Portuguese Queen-Mother in the shape of a giant orange. As soon as she had taken the seat of honor on the raised platform little girls attired in dresses of the Fortuguese colors were to have appeared suddenly and to dance before her; but the orange scheme did not work and had to be dispensed with. But the little girls attired in dresses of the tringuese colors were to have appeared suddenly and to dance before her; but the orange scheme did not work and had to be dispensed with. But the little girls were treed and they gave a fine exhibition of classical dancing. One of the timest dancers, Lady Troubridge's daughter Rosemary, presented a houquet of crimson coses to the Queen. There were quite a number of stalls and Queen Amelia made purchases at each of them.

Thoses who assisted the Queen on the platform included the Duchess of Somerendon, Lady Priscilla Annealey, Lady Clarendon, Lady Edward Cavendish, Lady Emmott, and Mrs. Herbert Benyou.

Comtesse de Flahault figures prominently in memoirs of the Regency period exerted her influence to prevent the mari riuge of the Princess to the Prince of

The aged Emperor of Austria once wrote a drama "Maria Theres," which was staged in Vienna with great success, "Carmen Syria," the Queen of Roumanie, has written popular plays. The Queen of Spain also can lay claim to dramatic ability, for a short play from her pen recently was acted before the Spanish Court. The Queen of the Religions once wrote a remantle drama which, when performed at Brussels, realizing the Bellow for a local children's holiday fund.

The repairing to be done to St. Faul's Cathredal in Lendon, whose stability is believed to be threatened by modern traffic conditions, reminds one that Ween, the famous architect, long had to contend with those who after the great London fire proposed a mere patching-up of St. Paul's, rather than the building of the new editice. Pepys, in his diary for 16%, tells of two visits to the lottering week of the cild cathedral: "I stopped at St. Paul's, "work he wall did see a hideous sight of the walls of the church ready to fall, and I was in fear as long as I was in it." A second entry runs: "Up betimes and walked to the Temple and stopped, viewing the Exchange, and St., sight to the otnone falling from the top of the streple do make me senalck." No need telling anyone after the use of the word "scaslek" that the famous diarist was the Secretary of the Admiralty.

Archibald Brown, who died at Windsor,

Archibald Brown, who died at Windser, was the youngest brother of the well-known John Brown, Queen Victoria's trusted servant and couldant. He passed the greater part of his tife in the Boyal service, having obtained a post in the Household at an early age through his brother's influence. For many years he was a nuge to Queen Victoria, but when King Edward succeeded, he retired on a negation.

Nine Edward succeeded, he retired on a heration.

John Brown's relatives inherited a considerable amount of property when he died. He had saved largely out of his perquisites and his many presents. The gifts of Jewelry and plate which he had received at various times were valued at a high figure.

No doubt John Brown was a faithful servant and friend of the late Queen, but she must have valued his services too highly for it was not considered quiet the thing that "his grateful queen" should have erected a statue to his memory in Balmoral Fark when he died. At any rate her son, King Edward, thought so, for upon ascending the throne at his mother's death he had the shaft at once removed.

The most important recent change in the Royal British Household has been the establishment of a "College of Chaplains" of which the "Clerk of the Classet" (Bishop Boyd Carpenter) is the head. There are two Deputy Clerks of the Closet (Canon Sheppard and Canon Dalton), twelve chaplains in ordinary and twenty-four honorary chaplains.

There is also a staff of the Chapel

that of Vice Chamberiain.

English papers, to my mind, should not be so bent upon throwing stones at America for its "unjust" judges, as a sequel to the two recent impeachment proceedings before the United States Senate. Justice in Great Britain was not always administered as impartially as it is nowadays. There were at one time the so-called "basket-judges" who earned their nickname from the presents handed them in open Court by litigants. Then, in more recent times, there were the "adding Justices," so cleverly satirised to make the control of the second when at a hearing. A case is on record when at a hearing. A case is on record when and a hearing a second when a second when the process of the second when the second when
